CCDLT is a software package for creating composite color images from monochrome input images via various blending techniques. The original images and the created composite images can be saved or printed. BatchLumaColor is a program that colorizes black and white images using different algorithms and blending techniques. This software is based on the BatchConvert algorithm and it allows you to specify the colorization algorithms and all the options. Also, the program allows you to specify the blending technique for each colorization algorithm. CAME is an advanced real-time software framework for multi-board digital imaging/signal processing system. It is very easy to use and offer very accurate results. The image processing model implemented in CAME includes small-sized hardware such as camera, GPS, IR port, DMA and memory, as well as big-sized hardware such as sound card, fast Fourier transform, DSP, MPEG encoder, etc. The CalvoCIF tool is a simple utility that parses CIF files and yields the list of all available cameras, locations and exposure time parameters. It is used in conjunction with CalvoCIP to be able to report back the calibration status (not valid, not defined etc.) the Con-man, but less so the Con-woman. There's a reason everything Bill says about women in reality TV is so damned patronizing: He's smugly looking down his nose at us, too lazy, not smart enough, etc. He's not part of the scene. He's not even seen as part of the elite. He has all the money in the world, and you know what that means. Women on reality TV? Do they know what a reality is?
