Richard Neutra Richard C. Neutra, R.C. (1925–2016) was an American architect, known as the "father of counterculture modernism" and for his contribution to the Southern California architectural landscape. Many of his works, such as Los Feliz, California, The Row, and Brandywine, have been designated National Historic Landmarks. His earliest project, the Gamble House, is now a National Historic Landmark and serves as a model for later projects such as the Palm Springs Modern House. Neutra has been described as a "pioneer of the California beach town movement and the architectural movement known as 'psychedelic modernism'". Some writers, however, have disputed his claim to have influenced the movement and considered him a late arrival in the 1960s.

Biography Early life and education Neutra was born in 1925 in Pasadena, California, the son of Katherine (née Woodward) and Max Neutra. From an early age, he was fascinated by his father's work as an architect, particularly by his research into the history of architecture. His father sent him to Germany on a scholarship to study at the Bauhaus, but the plan was interrupted by the Second World War and he returned home. Neutra studied architecture at the University of Pennsylvania, where he met his future wife, Betty. In 1943, he left his studies at the University of Pennsylvania and enrolled at the Yale School of Architecture, from which he graduated in 1946. Early career Neutra was appointed Assistant Professor of Architecture at Yale in 1947. He moved to Los Angeles in 1949, and in the late 1940s and early 1950s, he worked for seven years as architecture critic of the L.A. Times. In 1951, he joined the faculty of the USC School of Architecture and was appointed professor of urban design in 1961. Life and work In 1951, Neutra moved into his residence of Brandywines, a neighborhood in the Hancock Park area of Los Angeles. He continued to live there, off and on, until his death. The house has been listed on the National Register of Historic Places. Many of his projects such as the house and landscaping on Austin Drive and the house on Sweetwater Court (now
