Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an acceleration sensor that is used as a sensor for detecting the acceleration of a vehicle or a sensor for detecting the acceleration of the user himself. 2. Description of the Related Art As a sensor that is used to detect an acceleration of a vehicle, there has hitherto been known a sensor that includes a mass attached to the vehicle or a sensor that is supported by the vehicle and that detects an acceleration of the sensor itself by using the Coriolis force (for example, Japanese Patent Application Laid-open No. Hei 08-57228). The sensor disclosed in Japanese Patent Application Laid-open No. Hei 08-57228 includes a rotor that rotates together with the vehicle body, a stator that also rotates together with the rotor and a detection unit that detects the Coriolis force generated in the stator by the Coriolis force generated by the rotation of the stator. The detection unit includes a plurality of detection electrodes and outputs a voltage that is generated by the flow of an electric current through these detection electrodes in response to the Coriolis force. The sensor is attached to the vehicle body with such a manner that a magnet is held by the vehicle body and the rotor is pressed on the magnet through a magnetic material to secure air-tightness. In the case of the acceleration sensor, which uses the Coriolis force, the axis of rotation of the rotor is tilted by 90 degrees from the axis of rotation of the stator. Accordingly, when an axial component of the Coriolis force is applied to the axis of rotation of the stator, a force component in a direction perpendicular to the axis of rotation is applied to the magnetic material that sec

For now, by typing it into the console window, it still shows up. I'm probably not setting it up correctly. Thanks in advance. A: When you do vm.name the value is set in the model and as a result the ng-model of the input and your select will have the same value. Change your code to: $scope.vm.name = 'user name'; and then your code will works

First detection of Trichomonas vivax in Parra skeletal muscle swabs of slaughtered chickens in Brazil. Trichomonad infection is a common protozoan infection affecting animals and humans. This study investigated the presence of Trichomonas spp. in 580 Parra skeletal muscle swabs of slaughtered chickens. The swabs were obtained from 5 different states in Brazil. The samples were submitted to the following procedures: semiquantitative method, direct application of mucosemin, fluorescent antibody technique (FAT) test, Gomes and Londrina tests, direct immunofluorescence (DIF), PCR amplification of the 18S rRNA gene, and total genomic DNA extraction followed by PCR amplification of the 18S rRNA gene. Trichomonad isolates were obtained and morphologically identified as Trichomonas vivax. The identified isolates showed high concordance with the FAT test. The overall rate of infection by Trichomonas spp. is 74.3% (453/580). Considering the severity of the poultry disease, it is important to detect trichomonad infection. Thus, the application of new techniques for screening and detecting the parasite is important because the initial costs are lower, the labor costs are lower, and the results are faster. In mammals, the uterus begins developing in utero about day 18 of the human gestation period, and becomes grossly apparent by about day 20. The development of the uterus during this early period is typically characterized by the differentiation and elongation of uterine glands and enlargement of the myometrial tissue. Such tissue differentiation and growth is important in preparing the uterus for implantation of a fertilized ovum after fertilization of the ovum by spermatozoa. This is accomplished by the endometrial epithelium forming glandular lumens and the uterine stroma undergoing further tissue differentiation which results in myometrial uterine contraction. The uteri of mammals are usually
