If a row has a link I would like to show the html inside the hidden div, how can this be done? I have the code to show the hidden div but I don't know how to hide it when a link is clicked. Currently I have `$(document).ready(function () { $(".row-name a.row-link").click(function () { $(".news tbody").prepend('content of page'); }); $(".row-name a.row-link").hover(function () { $(".news-html").slideDown(); $(".body").addClass("news-hover"); }); $(".row-name a.row-link").bind("click", function() { $(".news-html").slideUp(); $(".body").removeClass("news-hover"); }); });`; The anchor contains the class row-link. A: You have to first find the link `$(`

Hey people, I'm trying to create a responsive page, so I have the following line in the header: Now if I add a div after this line, the content inside will be a bit spacey. I tried the following but it didn't work: Also I can't seem to use any margin properties (at least in Chrome) on the div. Is there any way I can eliminate this extra space? A: Try using inline-block will keep them side by side, the space between them will be taken by margin property of div. If you set your body margin to 0 you will see Q: Preventing a URI from being routed due to an EditText with a focus I have a URI authorization server. The server has a method where the URI must be passed in by a caller. To protect the code form some possible attacks, I would like the EditText to hide if the URI is invalid. To do so, I was considering a simple if statement but this is not enough as the URI must be passed in through the whole app. I am trying to figure out how to prevent a URI from being passed in, in some cases. The URI can be: 595f342e71
