An electronic device may also identify the location using an external device, such as a global positioning system (GPS) device, a cellular base station, etc. Additionally, the electronic device may identify its own location using such external location devices, for example, when there is a risk of the electronic device being lost or stolen. For example, the electronic device may respond to an emergency call from a location of the electronic device to an emergency network, such as a government network or a carrier network. Further, by determining a location of the
