Have the firmware downloaded? complex, but rather with a view to defending the systematic status of all women and the antagonism that it reproduces against men. As we shall see later on, it seems that this antagonism is also manifested in the schools, and the authorities are also aware of this fact. For example, in many school regulations the terms 'ladies' or 'ladies-only' are sometimes used to explain the distinction between separate boys' and girls' classes, and the injunction 'study hard' is often given to girls as though it was a command intended to catch them out. A similar injunction - 'do not laugh' - is also given in the subject of Aesthetics, though in the form of an exhortation to the lesson-master. Finally, the student is told not to eat in the schoolroom. The third regulation here is also remarkable: 'never ask anybody to stay at your home, don't be impertinent'. This is a kind of introduction to socialization, a hint of the chaperonage which is to be expected at the end of the course. The problem with the girls seems to be that they are not intelligent enough, though they try to disguise their failure to master the material through a contempt for it (and this is really another way of expressing the act of taking off and using one's dress to set off the shoes). When it comes to the schoolboys, the problem seems to be that they are not sufficiently feminine, but they cannot conceal this fact and this is why they are criticised for playing football or for their bad manners. The attitude of the authorities is thus to pull the boys down to the level of the girls: it is not so much that they are encouraged to compete with the girls, as that the girls are encouraged to compete with the boys. The paradox is that the girls are encouraged to become 'artificial' just as the boys are encouraged to become natural. Both are encouraged to lose their sex. See also: Sex and work, The family.
