A: There are some slight differences in those 2 images, such as the scene, the resolution, and the focal point. Also, both of them were saved as JPEG, a common image format. When saving in the same image format (JPEG), both results are the same. You can save the image with a lower resolution to see the differences. Also, you could use the Blur Gallery Tool which is a free tool for that. Save the Blur Gallery Tool as a JPEG. Open the Blur Gallery Tool. Add the pics you want to save. Add a short title for your image. Clicking the blur icon generates the blurred image. Open the blur gallery tool again. You could also save only the blurred pic by selecting the part you want to see and then you would need to add the blur gallery tool and it will create the blurred image. Happy Shaking.

There are many occasions where my applications is removed by Google Play because I used permissions that are not required on my applications but not that I would want Google Play to remove my application. Is there a way to prevent Google Play to remove my applications when it is accessed via Google Play? I don't want to give read-only permissions to the applications because I would like to give read and write permissions and the user will only read the contents of the DB.

A: I had the same issue, and solved it with your answer. I needed to add the WRITE_SECURE_SETTINGS permission, but as you say, I don't want the user to be able to modify system settings. An alternative solution is described here. Since you want to only allow the user to view your data, you could then allow access to your data in Settings.

Q: Azure Function - Setting a Timestamp I have an Azure function that saves an object to an SQL database every two minutes. The time of day I run the function is not important, rather the month and day. I want to be able to save to the db any day and any month for a particular year. The function is set up like so: [FunctionName("AddNew")] public static void AddNew([TimerTrigger("00:00:02", RunOnStartup=false)] Tim
